New Website for Australian Catholic Bishops Conference

The Australian Catholic Bishops Conference has a vibrant new Internet presence, with the launch of its revamped web site.

The new ACBC site is an initiative of the Bishops' Committee for the Media.

It was designed by Catholic Communications, Sydney, and remains at the old address of www.acbc.catholic.org.au.

Bishops' Committee for the Media Chairman, Archbishop Barry Hickey, said he was delighted with the new site, which was more modern in design, easy to navigate and simple to use.

“The new Bishops' Conference website has been many months in design and the fruits of that work are clearly visible to the user,” he said.

“It conveys a fresh, contemporary view of the work that bishops do and the different ways in which they are involved with the pastoral care of their people.

“In addition the new site provides an easy to navigate way around the many documents and other items of interest issued by the Bishops' Conference.”

One feature of the new site, which will be welcomed by many organisations, is the updated membership database of the Catholic GST Religious Group. The new improved database can be searched by ABN, legal name, trading name or postcode. It also has a facility to filter search results by state or territory.

“I commend those who designed it and look forward to this new site serving the ACBC well into the future,” Archbishop Hickey said
